Pedophiles and other adults seeking an improper relationship look for opportunities to be alone with children. Some may groom victims by testing their ability to keep secrets and their response to increasing physical contact. Establishing clear behavioral and supervisory standards for adults interacting with minors can reduce opportunities for misconduct and address inappropriate behavior early. An institution should consider the following guidelines for employees, volunteers, contractors, and other adults interacting with minors on campus or in connection with an institution-sponsored program.

A. Preventing One-on-One Access to Minors

For institution-sponsored or on-campus programs involving minors, does your institution:
